

Mayor

John C. Liu (D)

My story is like so many New York stories. It began somewhere else. My family immigrated from Taiwan when I was five years old, looking for the same thing countless families have. Opportunity. Because that's the sacred promise New York City made with you. Come here. Work hard. Dream big. and if you do all that, you have the opportunity to make good. My parents believed in that promise. I still do, and that's why I'm running for mayor. To keep that promise. To continue to do what I've done as city Councilman and new York City Comptroller. fight for the people City Hall has forgotten. Working mothers. Immigrant breadwinners. Small business owners. Struggling students. Teachers and laborers and every single New Yorker who feels they have no voice. Of course, when you go after powerful people — they're going to go after you. They didn't want us finding out that the MTA was keeping two sets of books. They didn't want us going after mayor-approved projects that were robbing the city blind, recovering over $3B for the people of this city. And they sure don't want us to raise the minimum wage to a living one. But that's what we're going to do. Because this can't be a city of them and us. It needs to be one city. Where everyone gets a fair wage and a fair shot. Where people aren't stopped and frisked simply because of their color. Where every kid can get a good education. and where the mayor doesn't represent the 1%, but the 100%. This city has always made a promise with us. With your help, I'm going to make sure we keep it.
